RECYCLED PAPER

Recycling paper plays an important role in protecting the environment by reducing the need for logging and waste disposal. Recycled paper is produced with lower energy consumption and emits fewer harmful substances into the environment. Recycling allows for multiple uses of paper, which can improve the environmental condition in the long term.

The process of recycling paper involves the following steps: collection, cleaning, shredding, wetting, filtering, and pressing. During the production of recycled paper, paper pieces are mixed with water and chemicals to facilitate filtering and pressing. The paper pulp is evenly distributed during pressing and then dried to create the recycled paper.

INKLESS PEN

Inkless pens are a new generation writing tool that represents a revolutionary approach compared to traditional ink pens or ballpoint pens. As the name suggests, these pens do not require either ink cartridges or ink for use.

The uniqueness of inkless pens lies in a special composition layer located at the tip of the pen, which interacts with the microstructure of the paper. When we press the tip of the pen onto the paper, it leaves a mark. This process is similar to drawing with a pencil, but with inkless pens, there is no need to sharpen the tip, and the writing or drawing is much smoother and more uniform.

The advantage of inkless pens is that we don't have to worry about refilling ink. Inkless pens write without leaving a trace, so we don't have to fear ink stains or smudges. The pens are also durable, as the composition layer has a long lifespan and doesn't wear out as easily as traditional pen tips.

GEL INK &

Gel-based ballpoint pens, or gel ink pens, are popular writing instruments used for writing and drawing. They come in two main types: traditional gel ink pens and semi-gel ink pens. Traditional gel ink pens store ink in a reservoir or cartridge and dispense it using a ball or cylinder. Semi-gel ink pens typically mix the ink with a special substance for a more liquid and easy writing experience.

Gel ink pens are comfortable, easy to use, and provide a smooth writing experience. The ink dries quickly, reducing the likelihood of smudging. They offer a wide range of colors for vibrant writing and are great for detailed work.

Overall, gel-based ballpoint pens are versatile and practical tools for clean and smooth writing. They are favored by those seeking style and comfort in their writing instruments.

SUBLIMATION

Sublimation printing enables the transfer of high-quality and durable emblems, patterns, or images onto various promotional items' surfaces.

This process relies on the use of sublimation inks, which transition into a gas state under the influence of heat, embedding themselves deeply into the material of the objects. As a result, smooth and long-lasting emblems are created, characterized by excellent quality and resistance to wear.
